80591 Land Use and Environmental Law Course

Smolker		Full Term	T	6:00-9:00PM	Chae
---------	--	-----------	---	-------------	------

This course will present an overview of contemporary land use and environmental law. The emphasis will be on current substantive Florida and Federal law, common, constitutional, statutory and decisional. The course objective is to provide students with a working knowledge of current land use and environmental laws while grounding them in the competing foundational legal and philosophical principles that create the tension between and require balancing of individual rights with the need to protect the public and the environment. Course materials will include chapter excerpts from noted works, articles, statutes, judicial case law and actual case studies. Practicing land use and environmental lawyers from both the public and private sectors will be brought in as guest lecturers at times to cover certain topics and provide their practical experience and perspective.

Political Science

80578 Democratic Theory

Fitzgerald		Full Term	T, R	10:30 – 11:50	CHL 221
------------	--	-----------	------	---------------	---------

“Democracy is not an alternative to other principles of associative life. It is the idea of community itself.” - John Dewey, The Public and Its Problems

This course is an advanced introduction to democratic theory. It is designed for students with a strong background in political science, social theory or political philosophy. The purposes of the course are to familiarize students with both the history and tradition of democratic theory and democratic practice; to familiarize students with contemporary issues and dilemmas in democratic theory and democratic practice; to explore ideas about how democracy can work better in light of contemporary realities; to aide the students thinking through their own obligations as democratic citizens and help them improve their citizenship skills. This is a reading and writing intensive class with an emphasis on theory. Enrollment will be limited to 25.
